

Introduction

Foreword

The British Army is a highly professional organisation with extensive experience in training officers, soldiers, defence civilian staff and international students. It is rightly acknowledged as a world leader in the provision of military training. This training expertise, coupled with the British Army's operational record ensures that our training is delivered from a base of experience and not just theory.

International Defence Training (Army) (IDT(A)) continues to maintain a very close relationship with International Policy and Planning, Security Policy and Operations Delivery Unit, Director General Staff International and Headquarters Land Forces International to ensure that the training delivered to other nations' personnel is in line with of the Security Cooperation Activity Programme and the Army International Plan in support of Military Task 3.3 and 3.4. This training is a vital enabler in supporting the UK defence security cooperation principles abroad and developing the professionalism and competence of other nations' personnel in the disciplines of defence and security.

IDT(A) is the primary point of contact for British Army individual training and is responsible for the administration and attendance for all international students on UK military courses.

IDT(A) aims to continue to provide a substantial and meaningful contribution to UK Security Cooperation activities and help to establish long term relationships in the wider International Defence community.

Director General Army Recruiting and Training
Major General GW Berragan