

MESSAGE FROM HEAD OF IDT(RN)

This catalogue allows you to access easily information on the full range of established courses and guides you through the administrative process required to secure places on them. The range of training available covers all aspects of naval training, including instructional and management development, as well as specialised training for ship types and ship's companies. Furthermore, the opportunities for training are not limited to the contents of this catalogue, particularly as additional training opportunities can be arranged through our commercial training partner, Flagship, a world leader in innovative naval training solutions.

Our courses are undergoing continual review to keep them current and in line with best practice and sea training. The latest information is available from the IDT team or from the website:

Where you are unable to send your ship to the UK for OST, and courses are not appropriate, then mobile Short Term Training Teams (STTT) may be available to deploy and deliver training locally across the full range of disciplines.

The training we provide covers all types of vessel and all specialisations, which allows us to train your personnel across the full spectrum of training from new entry through to command of a ship and beyond. International Defence Training (Royal Navy) (IDT(RN)) is the first point of contact for all maritime training and our goal is to help our international partners develop their skills and capabilities as well as improving our ability to work alongside each other.

The IDT(RN) team contribute substantially to building lasting relationships with the International Defence community; a contribution based on a long and proud tradition of delivering the finest naval training to international Service and civilian personnel. Such a reputation is hard won and is guarded carefully, to ensure that standards are upheld across the RN training organisation and to present the International Defence community with the best training opportunity. The IDT(RN) challenge is to provide training of the highest quality that meets the need of all nations requesting courses. This is done through a process of open communication and fair assessments throughout.

We look forward to providing you with cutting edge, first class training to meet your needs.
